Who doesn't feel small and inadequate at one time or another? Children need to know they are full of tremendous power and potential. One of the best ways that parents and educators can teach this is by studying seeds. Like children, seeds are "little packets of power"—and can teach valuable lessons that children can apply to themselves:

- You can't tell what something will become just by looking at the outside.
- The size of the seed doesn't determine the size of the plant.
- In every seed there is a forest.

Little Packets of Power is a story-based curriculum for ages 6 to 8 that follows the adventures of Dill'm, a lovable character who feels small and inadequate. As Dill'm discovers that seeds aren't big, beautiful, or important-looking either, he learns that even the lowly seed is a packet of "tree-mendous" power and potential. Through Dill'm, children learn about the great potential hidden within seeds and discover valuable lessons that they can apply to themselves. Little Packets of Power is a fun, easy-to-follow, educational tool that helps children see themselves in powerful life-changing and world-changing ways.
